

Pearson Clinical Assessment Workshop One-Day Workshop For Teachers On Identifying Children with Dyslexia

Dear Teacher,

Does it bother you to know of students who might be intelligent enough to perform well in school but who find it difficult to read & write?

These children could be suffering from a learning disability called Dyslexia.

Dyslexia might be more prevalent in our school system than you might think. This debilitating condition interferes with classroom learning for the child even when the child exhibits average to high general abilities.

As a teacher and a school authority, you can help such a child learn better by helping identify this condition, using scientifically developed psychological tests that screen for learning-related problems.

The Raven's Progressive Matrices is a non-verbal test that identifies the learning abilities of children. The Dyslexia Screening Test-Junior (DST-J) is designed to identify school children who are at risk for Dyslexia. These tests are designed to be administered by teachers in school settings who have interest in special education and those who have experience in dealing with children with special education needs.

Register for our one-day learning workshop in 'Identifying Children with Dyslexia' in order to receive training on the above two tests. The workshop will include hands on training in the administration & interpretation of the above tests. The learning program is conducted by Pearson through its Authorized Training Center at ACE Resource Center.
